TO VISIT IN BELGRADE

One of the most notable landmarks of the Serbian capital is the Kalemegdan Fortress located on top of a ridge overlooking the confluence of the Sava and Danube Rivers. It dates back to Celtic and Roman times, when it was known as Singidunum, and since then it has been demolished and rebuild several times. Around the Kalemegdan Fortress, there is a vast park, offering a variety of recreational and other amenities, where most Belgraders and visitors prefer to spend their leisure time.

The city houses a number of museums. Notable among others are the Museum of Nikola Tesla dedicated to the life and work of the famous Serbian inventor, the Gallery of Frescoes where you can see full-size replicas of portals and frescoes from famous Serbian medieval churches and monasteries including the scale models thereof, and the Ethnographic Museum, whose permanent exhibition includes an impressive collection of costumes and other ethnographic artefacts. The ongoing exhibitions worthy of attention include a retrospective exhibition of paintings by the Academician Ljuba Popović (1934-2016) at the SASA Gallery of Visual Arts and Music, and the exhibition entitled 'The Old Konak: Belgrade's Forgotten Residence' at the Museum of Applied Art.

The National Theatre, a symbol of Belgrade and Serbian culture, is located on Republic Square, opposite the monument to Prince Mihailo Obrenović, the very ruler on whose initiative the theatre was constructed in 1868. Princess Ljubica's Residence represents one of the best preserved examples of architecture from the first half of the nineteenth century, just like the neoclassical Cathedral Church of St Michael the Archangel, situated opposite to it, at the intersection of Kralja Petra and Kneza Sime Markovića Streets.

The Old Palace, another royal residence, now houses the Belgrade City Assembly. Its construction was instigated by King Milan and completed in 1884, in the style of academism and after the project of the architect Aleksandar Bugarski. Not far from the Old Palace stands the House of the National Assembly of Serbia, another important city landmark and place of particular interest to tourists.

Last but not the least, within the area stretching from the Students Square, down the well-known Knez Mihailova and Kralja Petra Streets, all the way to the Sava River, you will find a number of popular restaurants and cafés that will help you to enjoy the city to its fullest.
